Short:
Jen Barton is a goofball masquerading as an adult. She is also the award-winning author of seven books for kids. Just a short girl with a tall imagination, Jen lives in Pennsylvania with her husband and spends much of her time thinking of silly things to amuse children.

Medium:
Jen Barton is a goofball masquerading as an adult. She is also the award-winning author of seven books for kids. She loves reading, cooking, gardening, and hopes to someday meet a dragon during a long walk in the woods. She started writing after the world's most boring day in the car, a harrowing experience survived only by telling stories with the kids. Just a short girl with a tall imagination, Jen lives in Pennsylvania with her husband and spends much of her time thinking of silly things to amuse children.

Long:
Jen Barton is a goofball masquerading as an adult. She is also the award-winning author of seven books for kids, including Forest Bath (Magination Press), a picture book for all ages about connecting to nature through our senses; Bernice Sandler and the Fight for Title IX (Magination Press), an Extraordinary Women in Psychology book for readers 12-18; School Shootings (BrightPoint Press), an InFocus book for grades 7-9; What's Your Story, Amelia Earhart? (Lerner Classroom), a Cub Reporter Meets Famous Americans book for K-3; What's Your Story, Harriet Tubman? (Lerner Classroom), a Cub Reporter Meets Famous Americans book for K-3; If Chocolate Were Purple (Flickerfawn), a picture book about love for PreK-3; and Fiona Thorn and the Carapacem Spell (Flickerfawn), a middle grade fantasy adventure.

Jen enjoys sharing her love of reading and promoting literacy. She has a BA in English and philosophy from Millersville University of Pennsylvania and is currently working on her MFA in Writing for Children at Hollins University in Virginia. Just a short girl with a tall imagination, Jen lives in Pennsylvania with her husband and spends much of her time thinking of silly things to amuse children.

jbartonbooks.com